COMMENTS:

I walked around the lakes on Tuesday, there is already a strong odour of diesel/fuel oils from the site. it would also appear that the site has been broken into, the fence adjacent to the lake has been pulled down, given the well trodden path leading to the fence, it would appear someone is helping themselves to the fuels. if the 'taps' are left open, fuels have a direct route to the river via rainwater drains. Bunds and catchment pits are a legal requirement, Control of Pollution (Oil Storage) (England) Regulations 2001.
