COMMENTS:

The scale of this development is wholly disproportionate to the existing infrastructure. Introducing a project of this magnitude will place unsustainable pressure on already strained local roads, public transport, schools, healthcare services, and utilities. There is no credible evidence that current infrastructure can support such a dramatic increase in population without severe and lasting consequences for existing residents.

Traffic congestion is a particular concern. Local roads are already operating at or near capacity, and the addition of thousands of new households will inevitably result in increased congestion, longer journey times, higher pollution levels, and reduced road safety. Any proposed mitigation measures appear insufficient when compared to the scale of the development. I strongly object the development of these dwellings.
