COMMENTS:

The location for this construction is totally impractical. The old bath road is essentially a residential road between Charvil and Twyford. It is not an appropriate location for storing vast amounts of chemicals & having extensive and excessive numbers of HGVs driving around there. Further to this from an environmental perspective there must be considerations to the protection of wildlife given that the site is connected to a protected park where plenty of animals live. Further to this if there were to be spillage or all the chemicals would flow into the river Lodden and into the lakes where so much wildlife lives. Overall it is a terrible idea to even consider building in this location. It is not an appropriate site in the circumstances, it would ruin the flow of traffic and has potentially catastrophic consequences on wildlife and could ruin a place sanctuary for exercise and mental health (as I often go for walks around the lakes myself). I want to state clearly, I object!
