Application red line

The Council noted that the submitted location plan includes an area of amenity land immediately adjacent to the dwelling's eastern garden boundary (seen below):

The General Permitted Development Order (GPDO) only permits the development applied for 'within the curtilage of a dwellinghouse'. Whilst the proposals do comply with the GPDO in this regard, the amenity land to the east does not fall within this definition.

Therefore, the decision letter has altered the red line to surround the house only as the works proposed are concentrated within its original footprint.
