COMMENTS:

Firstly I fail to see why anybody would think it a good idea to place a refueling station right next to a nature reserve with extensive lakes. With all the will in the world accidents do happen. Should a spillage or leakage occur it would be devastating to the wildlife in the nature reserve and could even leak into the River Thames.

Secondly the road network is already struggling with the volume of traffic which will worsen with the housing developments. It is not unknown for traffic to be backed up as far as the site trying to get through the village crossroad.

The site is on a bend which will make it a likely accident spot with huge tankers trying to turn into the site, the turning radius required for these vehicles will force them into the opposite carriageway.
