COMMENTS:

The main house of Thamesfield on this Thamesfield Village site was built in the 19th Century on the banks of the River Thames on the Berkshire bank opposite Henley-on-Thames.

On looking at the picture provided of the view as it would appear from the opposite Oxfordshire bank of Henley-on-Thames, it shows that the top floor of this proposed building stands out above the top of the beautiful white painted 19th Century building which overlooks the river. This top floor is flat roofed and the walls of the building are covered with dark gray ceramic tiles. It looks dreadful. I also OBJECT to the building being so very close to the neighbouring Remenham Row houses. It has two upper floors with balconies closely overlooking the Remenham Row properties' windows. It is a three floor building replacing a single storey one and is overpowering in such close proximity.
