COMMENTS:

I object to this application to effectively further the destruction of protected trees on land now known as Bigshotte Court. The clue to the reason for this objection is found in the words "PROTECTED TREES". By stating that "PROTECTED" means "PROTECTED" until the council says it is "NOT PROTECTED", is as absurd, and open to abuse, as it gets. As absurd as stating that you cannot break the law of the land unless you get written permission from the Crown Prosecution Service; which is something that "appears" to be happening more and more as we "move forward".

I concur with all the reasons given in the other submissions to strongly object to this application.

"The "nature market", called "biodiversity net gain" , means all new building projects must achieve a 10% net gain in biodiversity or habitat. If a woodland is destroyed by a road, for example, another needs to be recreated. This can happen either on site or elsewhere." Where has the biodiversity destroyed by the developer of this site been "recreated"? And at what cost to the taxpayer?

Where will the biodiversity that this application further proposes to destroy be "recreated"? And at what cost, as above?

Or does "biodiversity net gain" mean absolutely nothing at all? Mere indigestible word salad.

No doubt the hedgehogs are laughing all the way to ... the hedge?
